Canopy Endorses Republican Callaway For State's Governor

For the first time in the history of Georgia politics a Republican has offered his candidacy for the state gubernatorialcy for a two-party governmental system. A further result is in the form of governmental competition. This competition assures products of higher quality for more reasonable prices, thus more satisfied customers in the state's capital. It has been exposed to the major problems of finance and legislation. Callaway is aware of Georgia's deficiencies and her necessities.

Having served on the State Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia, Callaway also finds himself devotedly concerned with the educational opportunities and facilities in the state, himself a graduate of West Point. His being a graduate, is especially cognizant of the necessity and importance of a firm, well-rounded education.

Stressing the salient points of his speech with emphatic gestures, vagueness reminiscent of his a-hand technique, Lester Maddox, democratic nominee for governor, continues his campaign despite the paralyzing effects of this nation's most widespread epidemic, segregation. Maddox threatened to walk out if the audience did not refrain from inquiring about his segregation stand.

Maddox's reputation was made not as a politician, but as the owner of a small restaurant in Atlanta. His racially mixed clientele, now protected by the state as its chief executive. Fortunately, Maddox said that when he is elected governor (blue the day), he will surround himself with informed advisors to assist him in matters of concern to the people.

Maddox's qualifications for political positions were deemed insufficient by most political analysts. Maddox must form the electorate's choice. For a man concerned with individual rights, Maddox's ax-handle technique, Lester Maddox, has stirred violence.

Even in his own party Maddox has stirred violent controversy. As a result of the controversy, Charles Weltner withdrew from the congressional race rather than compromise his principles in endorsing the democratic nominee and a desperate in white for his actions in the controversy. Maddox was named by Democrats that feel that Arnall is the more responsible candidate of the party. The results of the run-off election exposed one of the drawbacks of strict party allegiance. As a result, Maddox found himself bound by oath to the candidate of his choice, but largely the choice of Republicans who voted to swing the election away from Arnall. Fortunately, Maddox has launched his campaign in the most forward-looking candidate, who can only match the opposition's position.

Those disfruntised Georgians who rely on Maddox to snatch them from what they consider to be the greedy maw of progress may find themselves securely a part of the nation's largest existing anachronism. Georgia ranks near the bottom of nearly all of the nation's socio-economic surveys. The state's expenditures should be managed in a responsible manner. Therefore, Maddox plans to place greater and more urgent demands on the state's educational, economic, and governmental concerns. Many of the matters should be referred to the residents of that state. Callaway is progressive in nature but conservationist in concept. The same strategy of speed Georgia's growth and move toward greater productive enterprises. However, Mr. Callaway possesses active programs and methods of necessary conservation. For instance, large scale specks in the state, not even 10 percent, must be conducted with brains-in-white procedures. The state's expenditures should be concerned and utilized in an efficient and popularly expressed manner. Therefore, mental surveys of the state's chronic conditions should be managed under a conservator. Callaway is not mischievous, but economical.

Georgia's daily and yearly expansions are placing greater and more urgent demands on the state's education. Students leave on Fridays not to return until Sunday. Many of them are not getting anything out of college. Even in his own party Maddox has stirred violent controversy. As a result of the controversy, Charles Weltner withdrew from the congressional race rather than compromise his principles in endorsing the democratic nominee and a desperate in white for his actions in the controversy. The CAMPUS CANOPY endorses Howard (Bo) Callaway for governor.

Weekends Find VSC Empty As Students Leave Campus

By DENISE CROSS

And there was then barrenness. All around there was darkness and even the slightest motion and sound were magnified by the silence. It was dark and it was sad. This place of learning and endearment was silent. Valdosta State College had been vacated for the weekend.

This imagery is the somewhat amplified version of a real problem at VSC. Students leave on Fridays not to return until Sunday and wonder why they are not getting anything out of college. Activities are being planned for each weekend by various groups, but for naught, for only a handful of students show up to take part in them.

College is a seven-day profession. Five of these seven days are spent in academic achievement and the other two are days off. Life is full of activity and a social hectic. All study and no play made John a dull boy, and the same holds true for Valdosta State College. College is a full time investment. A nothingness of every conceivable personality trait, it serves to develop the man into the world of diversity.

Students should not expect to go from school and return from college until they invest seven full days of themselves to the other hopes and desires—into it.

Progress Makes Challenge For Responsible Students

Valdosta State College in its program of massive expansion has a visible air of progress. As a result, the students are now faced with the challenge of curbing their hopes and satisfying their school. They have accepted that responsibility.

Mature Adults?

Those of college age have an apparent desire to be regarded as mature and responsible adults. However, after a quick surveying glance inside the new, modern, science building, one may wonder if the students are sincere in their request for independence and adulthood. Married tables and chairs are evidence of the students' negligence and abuse. Food scraps, paper cups, napkins, and cigarettes are found cluttering the tables in the snack bar. Most people have no desire to sit at a table containing such debris left by two or three other parties. One quick trip to the trash can would eliminate the unsightly and unpleasant mess.

Paper cups left on the marble surfaces in the new buildings have placed permanent water rings in the tables. Carelessly dropped or crushed out on the tile floors are leaving dirty scars that will never heal.

Each classroom in Nevins Hall has new desks or chairs or will have them eventually. These items will merely increase the responsibility each student must carry to maintain and protect VSC's property.

The campus area must be included in this "clean-up campaign." Valdosta State is widely known throughout Georgia for its beautiful and well-preserved campus grounds. Cigarettes carelessly strewn chewing gum wrappers, a crumpled cup, or even a scrap of notebook paper can create an obvious disturbance among the calm, immaculate grounds.

If each student will cultivate a sense of pride and will be considerate of the responsibility toward campus maintenance as a measure of courtesy and respect, then VSC will survive with a majesty the passing of time.
Cherokees Have Real Church, Replaces One-Room Building

After meeting for 90 years in a one-room wooden building, Baptists among the Cherokee Indians at Cherokee, North Carolina, now have a 4,300 square-foot church.

This church was the result of combined efforts of Baptist students from 11 colleges in Georgia. Working under the supervision of Walter Porter, Director of the Baptist Student Union, and his wife, Mary Lynn, these students volunteered to spend their summers in constructing a sanctuary for the Cherokees.

Four of the students who participated in the building project attended VSC: Peggy Calhoun of Albany; and Ida Conaway of Baxley, and Dyrall Wiggins of Albany; and Ida Conaway of Baxley. When asked why they volunteered, Dyrall Wiggins said, "We volunteered because she wanted "the personal satisfaction of helping others." Linda Smith said that the messiest of which was what the students called "goosh" (a cement-like mixture) to the walls.

Wiggins noted that most of the Indians worked in nearby Indian curio factories, or in various tourist trades. "I was surprised that the Indians don't live in teepees or cook on the ground," said Wiggins.

On the topic of Indian cooking, Miss Smith said, "Bean bread, a Cherokee mixture of corn bread and unsalted beans, really sticks to your ribs—the only problem is getting it off!"

All the students agreed that Mrs. Porter was one of their biggest assets by her ability to cook "fabulous meals" and "keep us organized." Mrs. Porter also furnished and set up children's Sunday School rooms in the church and taught the Indian women how to conduct a Sunday School class.

"I think my children were tickled to see me going back to school because now I'll be in their same boat," said Mrs. Elizabeth M. Isom, a junior at Valdosta State College.

But what Mrs. Isom didn't realize was HOW "in the same boat" she would be! She and her daughter, Hannah Norman Johnson (Mrs. Donald C. Johnson), are in the same Education 200 class, taught by Dr. Tom Renfro, assistant professor of Education at VSC. Mrs. Johnson is majoring in secondary education.

"I had no idea we were going to be in the same class until I met my daughter in line at registration," Mrs. Isom explained. "I don't know what I would have done without Hannah to help me during registration, it was so confusing," she added.

Registration procedures have changed since Mrs. Isom did two years of college work at VSC in 1936. She was pleased that when she decided to get her degree in elementary education, VSC gave her credit for most of her previous two years' work so she could begin as a junior this fall. She remembers that Dr. Manelle Jeter, now a professor in the education department at VSC, was one of her classmates in 1936.

Mother and daughter don't sit together in Dr. Renfro's class. "The first day of class, Hannah and the younger students got off the bus and up the stairs faster than I did," Mrs. Isom admitted. "So when I got there, there was only one seat in the back left."

Mrs. Isom and Mrs. Johnson, who is a senior transferring here from the University of Georgia this fall, commute daily from Moultrie, Where Mrs. Isom was born and raised.

Mrs. Isom has a son who is a sophomore at the University of Georgia, another married daughter who holds a degree in art from University of Georgia, and a 10-year-old son who attends public school in Moultrie.

Mrs. Isom, VSC Junior, and her daughter Mrs. Johnson listen attentively in Dr. Renfro's class.

Mother, Daughter "In Same Boat"

"We always study independently," said Mrs. Johnson, "But I'm going to have to type most of mother's papers, because she can't type!" she added with a laugh.

Mrs. Jan Law proofs public relations copy to be released to various newspapers.

Law Takes European Tour, Soon Leaves For Texas

Since June, 1964, Mrs. Jan Law has been busy keeping Valdosta State College and its students in the news. Mrs. Law, public relations secretary, will soon leave Valdosta to join her husband in El Rio, Texas.

Born in Flint, Michigan, Mrs. Law graduated from the University of Michigan with a B.A. in Journalism. Following her graduation, she worked for the Central Intelligence Agency in Washington, D.C., and then to V.S.C. She has written features for various newspapers in Georgia and Florida.

Mrs. Law, who loves to travel, has visited many countries outside the United States. She and her husband have been to Puerto Rico and Nassau; and this past summer, they went on a European tour. Mrs. Law, who speaks "fairly fluent Spanish," said Barcelona, Spain, was her favorite place in Europe.

Besides traveling, Mrs. Law enjoys folk music, bossa nova, and special programs broadcast on educational television.

During the 27 years since its construction, the House-in-the-Woods has served not only as a place of club meetings but also as a center of social gathering. The newly constructed College Union facilities are now replacing those of the House.

Among the more sentimental of Valdosta State’s Alumni an effort was planned to have the House-in-the-Woods moved to the Drexel Park area of the campus. However, for lack of response the plan was never realized.

Now the rustic House-in-the-Woods awaits her end aloof from the nostalgia of alumni and of the indifference of present students.

Lab Lacks Romance For Embittered SCLLU Members

By BUNNY BRIDGES

"Romance languages—huh! What's romantic about 'em?" This seems to be the general opinion of members of the "S.C.L.L.U. (Society of Confused Language Lab Users)."

One of the many types of lab devotees is the "fervent freshman," who may be found in the "I'll" any time he or she doesn't have another class. This enthusiasm springs from the "f.'s" desire to please his professor, who told him that the best way to learn a language was to listen, listen, practice, practice, practice.

The "f.f." hasn't learned the upperclassman's theory of instruction — "learn while you sleep." The older and wiser student is seen in the lab listening and sleeping; after all, what better place to catch upon sleep and impress his professor with studiousness.

Girls Inspect Lowndes Hall One Afternoon

Lowndes Hall, the newest men's dorm, has been officially inspected and O.K'd by two Valdosta Junior High School co-eds. The girls, who declined to give their names, visited the dorm one afternoon with the hope of "not planning to stay long." One of the girls decided that she would love to live in this dorm. They proceeded to sweep a few of the rooms, make a few of the beds, and, on one occasion, iron some clothes for one of the boys. The boys really keep the rooms too messy, and another thing, they shouldn't run around in their underwear—they might have visitors.

The girls seemed to be having an enjoyable visit until the hall counselor told them they would have to leave. He explained that female visitors were not allowed in the men's rooms.

Campbell Directs New Band

By HARRIETT PRICE

"We’re pioneering," said Sanford Campbell, director of the new band at Valdosta State. "But the band is definitely not just in the planning stage. It is an integral part of the music department."

Campbell said that there is good instrumentation in the band with its 26 members, but pointed out a need for flute, clarinet, and trombone players. He said there is excellent potential on campus for a good band at VSC.

"Although it is not ready for any full concerts right now, the band will share a concert with the Glee Club at Christmas," Campbell said. The band will also perform at President Martin's inauguration in November.

Campbell, who has been in band work for ten years, received his B.S. degree from Georgia Teachers College, now named Georgia Southern College. He received his master's degree from Vandercook College of Music in Chicago and is working on his doctorate from Florida State University in music education.

Before coming to VSC, Campbell was bandmaster at Brooks County High School and Cairo High School. He is president of the Georgia chapter of Phi Beta Mu, national bandmaster's fraternity. For the past two years, he has served as the state instrumental chairman of the Georgia Music Educators Association.

Deane Heads Wesley Foundation, Accepts Post After German Stay

"At Georgia Tech I majored in Wesley Foundation, not in electrical engineering," says O. C. Deane, the new director of the Wesley Foundation. Deane is an ordained minister who was studying theology at Tübingen, Germany when he heard of the opening in Valdosta.

"My wife is from Macon," says Deane, "and we wanted to find some place in South Georgia to live. We heard of this opening and we decided that this was our chance." The Deanes have an eight-month old daughter, Becky. Deane is a native of Collierville, Tennessee.

According to Deane, the program of the Wesley Foundation is run by the students. This year they are working with children at a Remerton project, holding seminars on theology on Wednesday afternoons, visiting homes for the aged, and planning three supper seminars each quarter which will feature a speaker or a film.

Deane welcomes all students to Neon, an informal fellowship each Sunday night at 8:30 in the Wesley Foundation.
